

WESTERLY

Thomas E. Brown, chief of police, and Constable Max Reithal, who left Westerly Monday morning for Maine in search of Charles Bailey, wanted for shooting and killing his brother, Edgar A. Bailey, returned Monday night with the accused as prisoner. The trip was made by automobile. Tuesday morning Charles Bailey was in the Third district court, before Clerk M. Walter Flynn, charged with the killing and murder of his brother Oct. 28. After reading the complaint, Clerk Flynn asked the accused if he had engaged counsel and Bailey replied that he had not but supposed he would have to later on. Clerk Flynn then asked the accused if he understood the complaint as read to him. He said he did. When put to plea he said: "Not guilty; had no intention of killing Edgar." The case was then continued for a preliminary hearing at the regular session of the court Friday morning next. Bailey was committed to the jail at Kingston and was taken there by Chief Brown and Officer Mitchell in the latter's automobile. The accused is 39 years old, of spare build, active and wiry, and wears a heavy gray-tinted mustache. Bailey is silent in regard to the shooting, which occurred on a Saturday night. He declared he remained within the limits of the town of Westerly until Monday morning. He went into the woods Sunday, came out of the Post road Monday and got a ride to Providence on a motor truck. At Providence he took a train to Boston. From Boston he went by train to Brunswick, Me., and walked from there to Bowdoinham, Sagadahoc county, where he formerly resided, and where he was finally captured. This place is about 60 miles from Portland.

Police Chief Brown states that with Special Constable Max Reithal, who knew Bailey, he left Westerly by automobile Saturday morning and reached Portland Saturday night. Sunday the chief and Reithal went to police headquarters in Portland and made known the purpose of the visit. Chief Brown stated that Bailey was a well known horse trader, had once lived in Portland, and spent most of his life in the state. The chief desired to visit the stables to see if he could get a line on the fugitive. The stables were visited, the local officers being accompanied by a police inspector, but no trace was found.

every horse trader in the section where Bailey last resided. Chief Brown and Reithal then drove to the home of Gerow, 60 miles away. They found a tall, spare man, over 10 feet 6 inches, with an air of determination that convinced the Westerly officers that they had struck the right man. Gerow is not only sheriff and chief of police but is also a practicing dentist, and Chief Brown said that when he is not engaged in pulling criminals he is pulling teeth.

Sheriff Gerow as soon as he heard Chief Brown's story said he did not know this man Bailey by name but probably knew him by sight. The chief told of the places in Maine where Bailey had lived and the sheriff said "Let's go to Brunswick." No trace was found there. Then the party went to Bowdoinham. There the sheriff found a man who knew Bailey and who said he had seen him within a week and that he was stopping at Tom Allen's place and boarding with Allen's mother, Mrs. Sagely, not far distant. While on the way to the Allen place the officers saw Bailey in a wagon with a man and a boy. They drove to the Allen place and Bailey went into the house. In the meantime Deputy Sheriff Robert Jack of Bowdoinham had joined the party, fully as active and efficient as the sheriff.

It was decided to leave the automobile in the roadway and that Chief Brown remain therein, as he was known by Bailey. Jack went into the wagon shed and reached the back door of the house. He found the door blocked by Mrs. Allen. Gerow was in front of the house and was about to aid Jack when Bailey rushed out of the front door and made a bee line for the woods. Reithal shouted "There he goes," and he put chase after him, closely followed by Gerow and Jack. Reithal fired at the fleeing man and immediately after Gerow fired a shot. Reithal succeeded in getting just ahead of Bailey as he neared the tall timbers. Pressing the revolver against Bailey's body, the fugitive was ordered by Reithal to hold up his hands, and he did. Gerow was Johnny on the spot. Bailey was searched for firearms, but none were found, but he did have in his possession $145 in cash.

The capture was effected about 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon and Bailey was lodged in the Portland jail Sunday night. The start on the return trip was made Monday morning. The reward of $100 offered by the town of Westerly was equally divided between Sheriff Gerow and Jack.

Charles Bailey had lived in Westerly only two years; his business was trading horses, and he is known through Maine as a horse trader. He had lived in Lewiston, Brunswick, Portland, Bowdoinham, Richmond, Auburn, Greenville, Hallowell, Durham and other places, and was known along the Kennebec as lumberman and ice man as well as horse trader. But for the prompt action of the officers Bailey would have reached the woods in a section of Maine in which he is familiar and his arrest would have been long delayed, if ever effected.

Edgar A. Bailey, who, it is alleged, was killed by his brother Charles, was 35 years old, and for 15 years had been employed by the R. A. Sherman Sons' company in Westerly and he was a member of the Carpenters' union. He resided with his mother, who is 50 years of age, and who was present at the time of the shooting. Edgar was a sober, industrious man, while Charles was addicted to strong drink and was of roving disposition. While in Westerly he engaged in horse trading and when he left horse after the shooting had two horses in the barn of the premises occupied by his mother and brother.

When Charles Bailey was brought into the Third district court Friday for a preliminary hearing, as the case is without the jurisdiction of the district court, he will be held for hearing on indictment by the grand jury of the superior court for Washington county.

A bulletin recently issued by the government geological survey shows a total value of stone sold in Rhode Island in 1918 was $277,494. Thirteen plants in the state are covered by the bulletin. The value of granite alone sold in the state in 1918 was $223,000. Rhode Island was one of the few states in the union which showed an increase in its output of granite. The principal granite output of the state, the bulletin says, is monumental stone, although building stone was also important. The output of monumental stone was from the region of Westerly.

The report shows also that Rhode Island is an importer as well as a producer of stone. In 1918, 24,141 cubic feet of coquina limestone from Indiana was shipped into Rhode Island. Miscellaneous varieties of stone sold in the state in 1918 included crushed stone for road material, valued at $45,750; and for concrete, valued at $4,500.

The same report shows that 45,124 barrels of fuel oil was used in Rhode Island and public utility electric power plants, and that during the same months 20,294 tons of coal was used in the same manner. The state plants produced in August 253,000 kilowatt hours of electric current by water power and 25,615,000 kilowatt hours of current by the use of fuel.

President-elect Harding will have some postmaster appointments to make in Rhode Island in offices in addition to those filled by President Wilson. Several postoffices in the state are being advanced to the presidential classes. Their names and salaries are: Anthony, $1,300; Edmond, $1,000; Mapleville, $1,500; Slatersville, $1,500; West Barrington, $1,400.

The White Rock mill and all other plants operated by the B. B. & R. Knight, Inc., closed Tuesday night for the remainder of the week. The general manager says this action is taken as a result of poor business conditions but that the mill has not yet determined whether it would continue to operate on a three days a week basis. For several weeks the Knight mills have been on a four-day schedule.
